Dear FCC:

I am a single working mom with a college bound daughter. We can afford our current Tracfone rates. Our phones make us feel safe and secure when out on the road. I work nights at a hospital that is quite a distance from my home, without my cell phone I would not feel as secure if I had car problems. I would be even more worried about the kids. We live on a very tight budget and don't have many extras! It would be difficult to add additional expenses for out phone useage. Like most middle class Americans, I feel that we receive most of the burden of payment in issues like these. It would be greatly appreciated if government would consider the "little guy" in these financial decisions. Thank you. Pam Short-Loeser

Thank you for your prompt attention to this matter. Please provide a written response indicating the status/resolution of this matter.
